FROM THE DESK OF THE PASTOR:

Job's cry of helplessness stands in marked contrast to the strong hope of those who put their trust in Jesus. Jesus heals the broken hearted and binds up their wounds. Such are the blessings of the good news.

The story of Job is well known, and the poetry of this man's tale of sorrow and heavy burdens is at one and the same time beautiful and yet heart wrenching. It draws the hearer or reader into Job's plight, and at the same time makes one admire the vibrant faith and some hope of Job.

The book of Job introduces Job as "blameless and upright, one who feared God and turned away from evil", with "seven sons and three daughters," yet calamity after calamity befalls him. In just two verses, we hear that a great wind blows through the house where his children were having a party, and the house collapses, killing them all. The sorrows of Job continue with "months of misery" and "troubled nights", and Job "like a slave who longs for the shade" continues to struggle, while his trust in God remains unshaken.

Job's experience is that of someone who has suffered much and tried to make sense of it in faith. Ultimately, fidelity and perseverance pays off, and Job is vindicated and is able to call God, his redeemer. Job is restored to good health and happiness.

Sickness and suffering is addressed again in the Gospel today. The story may sound a bit odd to contemporary ears. Peter's poor mother-in-law, St. Mark tells us, begins to wait on the men folk moments after she was healed from a sickening fever. However, the point of the story is not about her subservience. St. Mark tells us that every healing encounter with Jesus is for the purpose of restoring the sick person to active service in the community. It is a complete restoration and integration of a healed person into the whole community.

Reflexiones del Párroco:

El grito de impotencia de Job marca un contraste a la firme esperanza de quienes pusieron su confianza en Jesús. Jesús sana al de corazón roto y venda sus heridas. Tales son las bendiciones de las buenas nuevas.

La historia de Job es bien conocida, y la poesía del cuento de este hombre de dolor y cargas pesadas es a la vez y al mismo tiempo hermoso y aún de corazón desgarrado. Lleva al oyente o lector a la situación de Job, y a al mismo tiempo hace a uno admirar la fe vibrante y cierta esperanza de Job.

El libro de Job presenta a Job como "intachable y recto, quien temía a Dios y le daba la vuelta al mal", con "siete hijos y tres hijas," calamidad tras calamidad le sucede. En sólo dos versos, escuchamos que un gran viento sopla la casa donde sus hijos estaban teniendo una fiesta, y la casa se derrumba, matándolos a todos. Los dolores de Job continúan con "meses de miseria" y "noches turbulentas", y Job "como un siervo que anhela la sombra" sigue luchando, mientras que su confianza en Dios permanece inquebrantable.

La experiencia de Job es de alguien quien ha sufrido mucho y trató de darle sentido en fe. Por último, fidelidad y perseverancia vale la pena, y Job es reivindicado y es capaz de llamar a Dios, su Redentor. Job es restaurado a buena salud y felicidad.

Enfermedad y sufrimiento es dirigida nuevamente en el Evangelio hoy. La historia puede sonar un poco extraña a oídos contemporáneos. La pobre suegra de Simón, San Marcos nos dice, comienza a servir a los hombres momentos después de que ella fue sanada de una fiebre enfermiza. Sin embargo, el punto de la historia no es sobre su servidumbre. San Marcos nos dice que cada encuentro de sanación con Jesús es con el fin de restaurar al enfermo al servicio activo en la comunidad. Es una restauración completa e integración de una persona sanada a toda la comunidad.
